

THEY GROW HAIR.

Certain Ingredients If Properly Combined, Stimulate Human Hair Growth.

Rosorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered. Beta-naphthol is a most powerful, yet absolutely safe germicide and antiseptic, which prevents development of germ matter, and creates a clean, healthy condition.

Pilocarpine, although not a coloring matter or dye, is an ingredient well established for its power to restore natural color to human hair.

Borax, because of its well-defined softening and cleansing properties, is most useful in the treatment of scalp and hair diseases. Glycerine acts as a stimulant to the hair bulbs, and has a soothing, healing and nourishing influence. Alcohol is indispensable in medicine because of its antiseptic, stimulating and preservative qualities.

Recall "93" Hair Tonic is chiefly composed of these ingredients, which are compounded in a peculiar form, and we believe it is the most effective remedy known to medical science for scalp and hair troubles generally. We personally guarantee it to eradicate dandruff and scalp irritations and to grow hair, even though the scalp is bare of hair, providing of course there is life and vitality remaining in the hair roots.

We want every one troubled with scalp disease, dandruff or loss of hair to try Recall "93" Hair Tonic. If it does not remove dandruff and promote a growth of hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will without question or quibble return every cent paid us for it. This guarantee is printed on every package. It has effected most satisfactory results in 93 out of 100 cases where put to a practical test.

Recall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely unlike and in every particular different from anything else we know of for the purpose for which it is recommended. We urge you to try it at our entire risk. Certainly we could offer no better guarantee. Two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Sold in Paducah only at our store.—The Recall Store.—W. B. McPherson, Fourth and Broadway.

KING ADAMS OF SWAN ISLAND

HOLDS ALL THE OFFICES AND TAKES ALL THE GLORY.

Plucky American is Biggest Man in His Kingdom—Nation Has Less Than Hundred Subjects.

RULER OF PHOSPHATE LAND

Alonso Adams, king of Swan Islands in the Caribbean Sea, is the self-made ruler of two small sun-scorched phosphate islets about 100 miles off the north coast of Honduras. Compared to European standards of royalty, King Adams may not be an imposing figure in international circles, but he, according to the New York Evening Sun, is a big man on Swan Islands. He is his own secretary of state, and a few days ago when it became necessary for him to enter into diplomatic negotiations with the state department at Washington for the determination of the status of his kingdom he hailed a passing fruit steamer by wireless and came to the United States, landing at Boston.

King Adams does not use the wireless telegraph out of preference or because of any desire to be up to date. The wireless is his only means of communication with the outside world. The Swan Islands are off the regular lines of travel and there is no postal service, because the fruit steamers which ply the Caribbean do not stop at the islands except on special occasions. There is a wireless station on one of the islands, however, upon which King Adams relies for communication with the outside world. It is one of a chain established by the United Fruit company, operating between New Orleans and Colon.

Adams' realm includes the two islands known as the Greater and the Lesser Swan Island. The larger island is almost a mile and a half broad and two miles long. The smaller one has the same width and is about a mile and a half in length. They are difficult of access to steamers because of the rocky shore. The seat of government is a settlement on the larger or western island. They both are very flat and thickly wooded. They rise about 60 feet above the level of the sea. King Adams' loyal subjects include about 60 negro laborers, originally from Jamaica, but now citizens of the island. They formerly dug phosphate out of the earth but at present they appear to be unemployed, as phosphate is no longer exported. At one time the annual output averaged about 10,000 tons. But the Swan Islands are not such a bad place, after all, to live in. Of course, the heat is intense during the day, but usually there is a cooling breeze at night. The soil is excellent and capable of producing all the tropical fruits. The inhabitants of the island grow their own vegetables. There are ten large tanks in which rain water is collected for drinking. In addition, there is a large distilling apparatus for use in the dry season. The islands abound with ducks, geese, pigeons and turtles.

Years ago, in the days when pirates infested the Caribbean Sea, these little islands may have furnished a base for the operations of some desperate bands of freebooters who sailed forth to prey upon trading vessels. But if such was the case these stirring tales of adventure are forever lost, for the islands have never had a historian or chronicler to relate the glories of their former days. The records do not go back beyond 1862, when the New York Guano company filed proof with the state department under the guano act of 1856 to secure the protection of the government in extracting guano from the islands. King Adams went there about 20 years ago as the representative of one of the guano companies which owned the right to extract guano. But the industry never seemed to flourish, and in 1903 the company which owned the islands instructed

Adams, then its agent, to discharge the employees and abandon the island. Adams carried out his instructions in December, 1903, and left. But he went back within a few months and claimed title to them by right of discovery. In 1904 attorneys representing Adams sent a letter to the state department inquiring if proof of his claim to the ownership of the islands would not thereby prejudice the rights of any prior claimant who might appear in the future. Since then the department has had no correspondence either with Adams or with his attorneys, and it is believed that his coming visit to Washington is to endeavor to obtain from the department some guarantee to his alleged title by right of discovery.

The government, however, does not claim ownership or sovereignty over the islands, but under the guano act of 1856 merely considers them as "appertaining" to the United States for the purpose of extracting guano. There are many other islands which are not within the lawful jurisdiction of any other government and which are not claimed by the citizens of any other government whose status is the same as that of the Swan Islands. Under the law seven principal facts must be established before the president of the United States, acting through the state department, can grant the right to extract guano from an unclaimed island. These are as follows: First, that a deposit of guano has been discovered on the island by an American citizen; second, that the island is not within the lawful jurisdiction of any other government; third, that it is not occupied by the citizens of any other government; fourth, that the discoverer has taken and kept peaceable possession thereof in the name of the United States; fifth, that the discoverer has given notice of the fact as soon as practicable to the state department, on his oath; sixth, that the notice has been accompanied with a description of the island, its latitude and longitude; seventh, that satisfactory evidence has been furnished to the state department showing that the island was not taken out of the possession of any other government or people.

The United States has never claimed sovereignty over the island and has no power to determine disputes between citizens of the United States in regard to their rights in a guano island. In case that a dispute should arise the claimants would be obliged to vindicate their title in the federal courts. In the present case, however, Adams claims ownership to the islands by right of discovery after they had been abandoned by the guano companies.

Not much is known in this country about King Adams and his unique fight for the ownership of these islands, but mariners of the Caribbean, who know his story well, think of him every time they pass by the west end of the Greater Swan Island and see the fixed white light staring across the dark water from the only beacon on the island. Like many other branches of the government of the island, the lighthouse department is not as efficient as it might be. The charts of the hydrographic office of the navy department say that this beacon is "unreliable" because it is only lighted when an approaching vessel is seen.

CROSS FOR LIVING
MARBLE FOR DEAD

REPORT OF TREASURER WAS A FEATURE OF THE DAY.

Northern Historian and Publishers Searching for Records in South—Climax Comes.

SENTIMENT OF THE U. D. C.

Houston, Tex., Oct. 22.—Crosses of honor for the living veterans of the Confederacy; monuments for the dead—such was the sentiment expressed and voted most emphatically by the United Daughters of the Confederacy in the third day's session of their national general convention being held in Houston. The strife that developed over this question proved to be the greatest so far of the convention, and may be second only to the election of the general officers, which will be the final act of the convention.

The question of the award of crosses of honor was precipitated by a motion submitted by Miss Alice Baxter, of Georgia, who sought to have the lines broadened which were voted at the Atlanta convention, and which would give crosses to the lineal descendants of the veterans and to the relatives of those who fell on the field of battle. A motion was made by Mrs. Hattie Reynolds, of Kentucky, to provide crosses for collateral descendants of veterans, but this too, was voted down in the tightening of the lines which will furnish crosses of honor only to those of the grizzled veterans who have gone through the shock of battle.

Other than the settling of the vexing questions of the crosses of honor, the report of Mrs. L. Eustace Williams, of Kentucky, the treasurer-general, was a feature of the day's session. Her report showed during the year the receipts were $7,933.54, which, deducting expenses, left a balance on hand of $4,033.16. A motion was passed unanimously to vote $1,000 to the Arlington monument fund. A point that Mrs. Williams stressed was that the state tax should be sent to the state treasurer and not to the treasurer-general.

In the routine sessions the reading of state reports was resumed and continued until late in the day, interrupted only by the debate over the crosses of honor.

Note of Warning.

A note of warning was sounded by Mrs. J. Enders Robinson, historian general of the association, in that northern historical institutions and publishers were making a search of the south for the historical books and manuscripts. Mrs. Robinson declared a combination had been formed and that a representative was now working in the south for the valuable records. No mention was made of the firms back of the movement, but the warning was issued that a careful guard be made over the treasures of the south, as the impending offers had been made, the collection then to be exploited for private gain through publication.

The climax of the convention will come when the election of the general officers will be held and the selection of the next convention city. State makers are keeping in the dark as to the possible candidates, but it is said around the convention hall that Mrs. I. W. Faison, of North Carolina, and Mrs. Virginia McSherry, of West Virginia, are looming formidable for the president-general's chair.

The fight for the next convention city has narrowed down to Richmond, Va., and Little Rock, Ark., with sentiment much in favor of the Virginia city. Memphis, they say, will

ONE LESS BALD HEAD.

If You Are Losing Your Hair Read This Interesting Letter.

Gironx Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.
Dear Sirs—"I was told of your great remedy, Parisian Sage, that it would grow hair on bald heads, so I got a bottle and tried it and it is fine. I am a young man and only twenty-five, and was completely bald on the top of my head and now I have hair one inch long with the use of only one bottle. I only wish I could have shown you my photo before the hair started to grow and how it is now. I shall certainly keep on using it until I have a good head of hair, which I have no doubt it will bring." Oscar Armstrong, Engineer, Belleville, Ont., August 21, 1909.

To every reader of The Sun the American makers of Parisian Sage wish to emphatically state that they do not guarantee Parisian Sage to grow hair on bald heads, because in the great majority of cases the hair roots are absolutely dead and not even the wonderful virtue of Parisian Sage can resurrect them.

Mr. Armstrong started to use Parisian Sage in time, before the hair root was entirely dead and in such a case there is no good reason why Parisian Sage should not restore his hair.

W. J. Gilbert guarantees Parisian Sage to remove every trace of dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back, but he does not guarantee it to grow hair on bald heads.

Sold by leading druggists all over America and in Paducah by W. J. Gilbert. Large bottle 50 cents.

Capt. E. A. Wark with the Cutaway took a log raft out of the Tennessee river yesterday afternoon, delivering it to the Leonard Lumber company at Metropolis. This morning he took a log raft to the Marshall Box factory there.

The Bob Dudley was the Evansville packet today. She will be the packet there again Monday.

The Kentucky came out of the Tennessee at 9 p. m. yesterday and went to Brookport to unload, returning here this morning, where she is receiving freight. She departs at 6 p. m. tomorrow for Hamburg, Tenn. The City of Savannah is due this afternoon or tonight from St. Louis. She is making the trip in place of the City of Saltville, which will go down the Mississippi with the presidential fleet.

On a trial trip yesterday afternoon the Ark, a gasoline boat of the mosquito type, failed to maneuver successfully and returned. She is said to have started into the Tennessee.

The machinery of the Cutaway has been thoroughly overhauled and the boat is in fine shape for winter business.

A whale-like hydroplane motorboat which is practically a cross between an ordinary motorboat and a water hydroplane, has been creating considerable interest on the Thames because of its speed and appearance, says the Popular Mechanics. Only 22 feet long and equipped with a 50-horse power engine, it actually skims over the water at a speed of 30 miles an hour. The bottom of the boat is flat, with a horizontal plane on the forward keel to keep her steady. The speed and stanchness of the little boat has given rise to the idea that her design may be found of value for torpedo boat destroyers.

New Orleans Times Democrat of Wednesday says: "Capt. Frank Cassidy, well known between New Orleans and St. Louis, is here in the Charity hospital suffering paralysis in one of his legs. Capt. J. H. Captain Cassidy was formerly master of the steamer Liberty, running out of Cairo, Ill."
